Camilla Santinelli (March 31, 2016)

A new, captivating capsule collection that will make everyone happy - both the long time fans of the most famous sportswear brand as well as the most tenacious fashionistas.

After the success of the Air Force 1 and the NikeLab Dunk High x RT, the Italian designer, Riccardo Tisci [2], returns to collaborate with the Nike once again, this time with the creation of NikeLab x R.T.: Training Redefined [3]- the capsule collection that is going to be on sale in honor of the Rio Olympics this summer.

Created to pay tribute to the Summer of Sport, the NikeLab x RT: Training Redefined is a capsule collection that includes a complete clothing line and accessories with the intention of combining Nike's famous performance technologies (such as Dry-FIT and Flyknit) with the unmistakable style of Tisci.

"This is the first time everything is brand new and the forms are Riccardo Tisci," the creative director of Givenchy said. "The aim is to introduce a new volume, a new concept within the sport industry while at the same time respecting the functionality and performance of Nike".

NikeLab x RT: Training Redefined will be distributed in two distinct collections with completely different aesthetics: the first one in black and white, while the second one will feature floral and kaleidoscopic patterns.

Conceived to satisfy every performance demand, and designed in order to offer a safe and comfortable fit, these items are the demonstration of how the collaboration between the legendary American sportswear brand and the eccentric Italian designer once again leads to the creation of a product that perfectly combines a refined design and excellent technical qualities.

Thus making us hesitant only when it comes to the color and model to choose. The new collection will be available starting in July in selected NikeLab stores and online at nike.com/nikelab.

A second released is scheduled for the following month, with prices ranging from $50 to $260.
